

Multi-Disciplinary Panels: The Good, the Bad and the Ugly

An effective multi-disciplinary panel is like a well-oiled machine. Each member uses their skills and experience so that collectively they gather the best evidence, in the most therapeutic way, before reaching a well-reasoned decision. There can be the added benefit of a debriefing session afterwards, to improve each member's own practices and wellbeing.

However, not every multi-disciplinary panel achieves this ideal. So what can you do to improve your experience of sitting on a Tribunal panel and increase the panel's effectiveness for the Tribunal participants?

Join our panel of experienced Tribunal members, in a facilitated discussion of strategies, tips and techniques for ensuring good multi-disciplinary hearing.
